VOL. 14, NUMBER 100 MONESSEN, PA, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 8 1915 SIX CENTS THE WEEK

The fall season is here. This country has arranged to loan $500,000,000 to Great Britain and France. Are you still croaking hard times? Maybe a little judgment and business push would help you.

Local Voters Loyal To Republican Principles

The report seems to be spreading over the county that Monessen is planning to bolt the Republican ticket at the November election. We don't believe that report ever started from this town. We believe it was started by Democrats for the express purpose of getting prestige for their candidates. We are positive it started in this way, for the news of the primaries had not died away, until many of the Democratic candidates swarmed into town to look up sore places. They seemed to think this would be a fertile field for votes because all local Republican candidates were defeated. So since the twenty first day of September, they have been coming to look up sore Republicans.

This town presented for the consideration of the voters of the county, three candidates. All were clean, respectable and competent. They made a vigorous campaign and had almost the united support of their home people as the vote will show. Neighbors, friends and business associates neglected their business and went out over the county day and night to help win the nomination, but in the battle of ballots we lost. This paper believes we lost honestly. We were not counted out. The Republican organization took no part in defeating the Monessen men. No big interests objected to the men we advanced and our defeat was the result of taking a chance.

If we expect to get sore if defeated, we have no right to enter where there is a contest, and there will be a contest every time to any office that pays an annual salary of from $4,000 to $6,000 a year.

This town went into the contest with all of its heart and with that indominable spirit that often wins but we lost this time and we lost to men who fought as hard and as determined as we did, and had we won, we would have been greatly displeased had we heard that they would bolt the ticket. Now why not look at the situation in a safe and sane way. Bury the past. Look on to the future welfare of the town, county, state and nation.

The Republican ticket in Westmoreland county should be elected by the greatest majority ever given to the party in this county, and it behooves Monessen to do her part. The candidates who aspired for office and their friends should show the same loyalty to the party as they would have expected from others.

We are in the verge of a presidential campaign, and this town with her magnificient industries certainly wants to be in the fore front in the Republican column when that party stands alone for a protective policy for American industries and American labor. Great questions will be involved next year and this town does not want to stand out and rebel on account of a lost cause in a primary contest. No, that would be to stand in the way of our own progress and stagnate our wheels of industry.

The primary election is over. We are now in a contest between party and party where principle is involved, and men if this town stands for a principle which has proven innumerable times to be right, let us off with our coats and roll up a big Republican vote. We will want to figure in future campaigns, and we will ask the Republican party for favors and recognition, and let us as Republican town, deserve what we go to the front for.

This paper advocates the success of the Republican ticket. Men. vote it straight. Our nominees won in a hard contest. Give them your loyal and unstinted support. Let us submit to a majority decision for it is the foundation of our government.

Foot Ball Saturday

The Monessen Scholastics will open their season at home tomorrow afternoon at the Page park, when they meet the strong Crimson Thirds of McKeesport. The locals are confident of another victory after defeating the strong Belle Vernon Sterlings and have held nightly practices this week. They realize that the McKeesport team is one of the fastest in Western Pennsylvania, and will present their strongest lineup in the game tomorrow.

An automobile parade will precede the game. The members of the two teams will occupy automobiles along with their many friends and the principal streets of the town will be traversed before going to the grounds. This is the fastest lightweight team Monesesn has ever had, and all should turn out and help them in a successful season.

Appeal For Aid

Must the orphan go hungry? Shall the widow's sorrows be multiplied? Shall Monessen send thousands to war sufferers, and be satisfied to let the needy at home go hungry, unclothed and die for want of necessities.

This is the problem that now confronts the local "Board of Charities." Today there are scores of little orphan children whose father and protector has departed this life, leaving the mother and little ones to the mercy and charity of the public.

What is to be done with them? The Board of Charities have exhausted all available funds and is compelled to refuse aid to those most deserving. Monessen has many unfortunates who must be cared for out of public funds. The Board of Charities now comes to the generous hearted people of Monessen, who have been so liberal to aid others, and appeal to the same to help the home sufferer. Let everybody give something and give it now. All money should be left with A. Tanzer at the Monesen Savings & Trust company. Nothing more can be done until the people respond, as the Board has exhausted its resources. It is hoped that this public appeal will bring a quick and liberal response.

Disappointed

The West Newton Times Sun, somewhat disappointed at the failure of the Governor's party to pass through that town, according to schedule, also thinks that a man after election should travel according to schedule the same as before. Editor Waters says:

"A car which was sent over the road for the purpose of ascertaining its condition, became ditched between this place and Madison, and had to be pulled out with a team. This put a crimp in the plans of those who had the governor in toe, and this end of route 118 went without executive inspection. Pity they hadn't braved the road, and stuck every bloomin' machine, including that of His Majesty. While not very creditable to the Highway department, what a powerful object lesson that would have been, to say nothing of the ludicrousness of the picture. But saddest of all 'it might have been.'

"Knowing Governor Brumbaugh's local option leanings, one wonders why he should have evaded such a "dry" stronghold as West Newton. But we wonder not that he's dry when he shows such antipathy to mud and water as his change of route indicated. But it wasn't a case of local option Tuesday, rather a matter of keeping the governor dry.

"The Governor must have been tipped off as to the condition of the road between here and Madison. First hand information, however would have been more effective in impressing His Excellensy of the great need of a good highway from the Youghiogheny to the county seat. The surprise is that the genial executive should show such a timid spirit, and fear to brave the elements when by so doing he would learn the real condition of the highway and its great need of improvement, and at the same time receive hearty welcome everywhere along the line. He'll be sorry when he hears what he missed here."

Trip Abandoned

Frank Hess, William McKinley, William Jones, Lloyd Miller and Cameron Saivey, local High school students, started out the other day with intentions of going to Pittsburgh to take in a show and have dinner at the Fort Pitt hotel. Their plans went amiss, however, as they got stuck in the mud near West Newton. They missed a session of school and did not get home until after midnight. Their parents took them to task for their escapade and they have promised to never again roam so far from home without a guardian.

Manifest Interest

The effort being put forth to organize a kindergarten here is proving very successful. Wednesday this paper inserted a notice for parents to leave their names at this office. and it has resulted in fifteen responses already. It is believed a nice school can be organized.

Many are now inquiring where the school will likely be located, as this is a very important matter in sending small children to attend. The school board has consented to donate the use of one of the portable school buildings at the McKinley building on Reed avenue and should the school be organized, this proposition will likely be accepted. This will be central and a near approach for all children living on both hills. Some have inquired as to tuition, but this is a matter yet to be determined. The object is to get a competent teacher and one thoroughly familiar with every detail of the work. Parents interested in the work are asked to come forward and help with the enterprise.

Decision Saturday

All of the ballots in the Hempfield No. 5 district have been turned over to Judge Doty who will give his decision Saturday morning. This will determine all contention as to whether the tabulations were properly made or not, and the votes properly distributed among the candidates. W. D. Reamer, who has been declared one of the Republican nominees through his attorneys, took the position that all of the ballots, 102 in number, should be thrown out in so far as they effect the office of commissioner.

In the examination, the election board denied that any fraud had been committed, denying also that word had been sent out from Greensburg that certain candidates should be favored. The board said the erasures on the tally sheet were made to correct an error and it was impossible to get a new sheet as only one had been sent to the precinct. It is believed the recount will not change the Republican ticket to be voted in November.

Hempfield No. 5 is one of the precincts very much in the limelight during the days of boss ridden Westmoreland county when political honor was more in the breach than the observance.

Stolen Cows Returned To Their Owners

The authorities of this and surrounding towns are on the lookout for a man traveling under the name of Mike Psles, who stole two valuable cows from the pasture at the Luce farm about two months ago and later sold them to unsuspecting parties residing in the vicinity of West Newton.

The animals were the property of John Jacobson and John Hill of this city and were valued at $100 each. They were taken from the Luce farm on the night of July 14 and despite all efforts of the owners, no traces of them was discovered until a few days ago when the cows were seen grazing on farms near West Newton. Constable Smith was authorized to secure the animals and found them in possession of Charles Wilhelm and Roba Galick.

Both men stated that they had purchased the animals from a man giving the name of Steve Psles, who seemed willing to part with the cows at a great sacrifice owing to financial difficulties. The two cows were sold for $70 and the alleged thief after pocketing the money, tendered a receip to his unsuspecting victims and departed for parts unknown. The cows were returned to their owners this week and Mr. Wilhelm and Mr. Roda are out $40 and $30 respectively, while the police are hunting the thief.

Need More Charity

The "Holier-than-thou" attitude and lack of sympathy on the part of many worthy folks may be attributed to provincialism. They hold themselves superior to others not as good as they are, because they have had no experience. They have never suffered. Therefore they cannot resist throwing in a lecture with their alms. They simply are not human.

A writer in the Western Christian Advocate scores this tendency when he says: "One of the most remarkable things about certain good people is their severity in dealing with their fellow men. Particularly is this true with a certain class of men and women who led what might be called protected lives. They have never known from experience what poverty, sickness, disaster or disgrace mean, but they are almost devoid of sympathy in dealing with their neighbors who have had one or more of these things to deal with.

"To give a garment and a lecture together, to pry into the last detail of family life before giving charity, to insinuate openly or covertly that every applicant for aid is an imposter, to make the helpless poor feel like criminals, these are the crimes—of which many good people are guilty.

"Some day, it may be, we will all be old, and it may be that some of us will be poor; so let us cast a little bread and sympathy on the water so that it can come back to us in case we need it."

After all as some epigrammatist has reminded us, "there is so much bad in the best of us, and so much good in the worst of us, that it ill becomes the best of us to speak ill of the worst of us." A little more charity all around; a little more milk of human kindness; a little more understanding and sympathy, and the world will wag more easily along its orbit.

World Gazing This Way

The world of capital and labor will look towards the Colorado mining camps with wondering eyes since John D. Rockefeller has visited the homes of his workmen, and met them shoulder to shoulder in the mines. Capital and labor have come together for once, and there seems to be a common understanding that will be helpful to all concerned. The new and to-be-widely-advertised plan of collective bargaining, framed by Rockefeller for his Colorado employes, was presented at a meeting between Rockefeller and representatives of his camps. The plan will be submitted later to the board of directors of the Colorado Fuel & Iron company and to a secret ballot of employes for ratification, which is a foregone conclusion.

Instead of dealing with the United Mine Workers, Rockefeller is understood to plan an organization of his own employes, and the inception of a contract arrangement covering every phase of life in the company's closed camps. Announcement of the plan will be given later for publication.

If this plan works, it will likely be introduced as a compromising method in many factories, mills and mines throughout the country. Outside interference in behalf of labor is obnoxious to capital and opposition to organization is equally obnoxious to labor, and to remove the source of contention will be a wonderful step toward the advancement of the country.

Eliminating Bosses

There is a desire in the public mind to eliminate bosses from politics, and that desire will pretty nearly nominate in the next national convention. For years insurgents and political enemies of Senator Boies Penrose accused him of owning the state legislature, and by his powerful influence or whip hand kept himself in the national congress. They prayed for a law that would change the method of electing United States senators in order to give the people a chance. This, they claimed would be the only way to defeat Penrose.

Finally a law of such a nature was passed and the first to take advantage of it was the much misrepresented Penrose, with the result that he walked away with the nomination when he was made the sole issue and defeated the combined forces of insurgents and Democrats at the general election. This proved that all through these years of bitter animosity towards Penrose and the legislature that the people were getting through the legislature just what they voted for.

Senator Penrose now declares that delegates will go to the national convention next year uninstructed. In that event the control of political organizations will not avail as much as people expect.

No Shacks, No Slums

As the interest in health and sanitation grows in this country, the menace of the slums and the shack becomes more insistent. In the big cities, they are finding the problem of housing a most serious one. In the smaller cities where the slums are small and shacks few, the public is beginning to see that it is far better to prevent than to wipe them out later on.

Experience in the big cities shows that poor people go to live in slum shacks because the rent is cheap. The surroundings are mean, sanitary conditions bad, and they find it almost impossible to keep the place clean. Finally they give up. In two generations cleanliness means nothing to such a family; it would not keep clean and sanitary if placed in a palace.

The pig does not make the sty; the sty makes the pig.

So, even the smallest cities have their housing problem. The solution of their problem is prevention. Permit no shacks; prevent slums.

Swat the Spitter

Two important factors are now recognized in regard to tuberculosis. The first is that most persons carry some germs of disease with them. The second is that most cases of tuberculosis are not recognized until they are quite advanced. This means that thousands of persons who have no idea that they are tuberculous, are probably spreading the disease. It means that almost any of us may have tubercle bacilli in our sputum without realizing that we are sick. The gist of all this is that spitting by presumably healthy people is not only a nauseous habit, but is a source of disease.

Enforce the law against spitting. Arrest the man who spits on sidewalks and floors, no matter who he is. Make it uncomfortable for the spitter.

How a Clodhopper Made a General's Reputation

By F. A. MITCHEL

Johnny Hunker enlisted in 1861 in an Ohio regiment to "fight for Abraham Lincoln's daughter," as the phrase had it in those days. Johnny was a farmer's boy and didn't know any more about war than he did about managing a circus It so happened that he fell under the command of a general who had graduated in the engineer corps at West Point, had been sent abroad during the Crimean war to observe the strategy of European armies and had written a report which had caused him six years later to be picked out for one of the great commanders of the war between the states In short, he was at the apex of the pyramid of military intelligence, while Johnny was one of the many thousands who formed the base

The force that Johnny served with formed the extreme of the right wing of an army whose commander was anxious to advance, but a fort so situated in a pocket in the hills that it was difficult to take was delaying him, for it is a military principle that an army must not leave a fortification in its rear The scientific soldier who commanded this wing was approaching the fortification in accordance with the principles of military engineering—in other words, by zigzag trenches. The only objection to this plan of reducing the fort was that it took a lot of time and delayed an army of 70,000 men from advancing. Meanwhile the men who composed the army were costing the government immense sums of money, were dying of camp fever and were getting generally demoralized

Johnny Hunker, who didn't know enough about military matters to keep himself in camp unless permitted to go elsewhere, one night, feeling restless, stole out without waking his tent mates, evaded the camp guard and wandered away. He was too stupid to avoid going in the direction of the enemy, and while men were crouching in the trenches he was stumbling along in the dark toward the fortification they were trying to dig out. Presently he came to a dirt wall. Lighting a match, he saw that it was inclined and about ten feet high, but he thought he could climb it and he did. At the top he laid his hands on something that felt like a log. By feeling along it he found that it was a log. Vaulting over it, he proceeded along the top of the dirt wall, which was some eight feet thick, and came to another log. In this way he discovered a number of logs side by side on top of the dirt wall.

Hearing a storm of snores below him, he concluded that they might come from Confederates, and concluded to retrace his steps. Sliding down the incline, he was groping his way back, as he supposed, over the same route by which he had come, when suddenly he dropped into a trench, falling on several sleeping men.

Angry at being disturbed in their slumbers, they reported Johnny's appearance among them, stating that he was likely a spy from the fort who had lost his bearings and fallen into a trap The result was that the young man was sent to the rear in care of an officer, who was directed to turn him in as a captured spy

In the morning Johnny's capture was reported to the general and after breakfast a staff officer was sent to bring him to headquarters When Johnny appeared the general began to question him.

"Who are you?"

John Hunker of Company B, —th Ohio."

The general sent for the captain of Company B and went on with his questioning. He asked Johnny how he happened to be out among the trenches at night, and Johnny told the story. When he came to the dirt wall, as he called it, and the logs the general pricked up his ears. He asked Johnny how many men he had heard snoring, and Johnny replied, "A hull lot." On being asked what he meant by "a hull lot" Johnny explained, "There must 'a' been four or five of 'em."

While the questioning was going on Johnny's captain came in and identified him as a private in his command. He was very severe in his manner to the culprit, being mortified that one of his men should have been caught in such a breach of discipline

Within half an hour after the interview between Johnny and his commander the right wing of the army was drawn up in line of battle and an order given to march upon the fort. When the men reached it they clambered up the sides to the parapet, as Johnny had done the night before, without drawing a single shot. They found that what he had supposed to be a row of logs were Quaker guns—that is, logs shaped to represent cannon. A few lean Confederates in butternut were seen clambering up the hillside. They had been in charge of the fort and kept the guns from falling off their supports.

The commanding general was informed that a scout had discovered that the fort was practically deserted. The commander of the right wing was promoted, and the army advanced.

As for Johnny, he was killed during the campaign that followed and never knew that he had informed one of the most scientific strategists in the army that he was besieging a deserted fort. Perhaps it was as well, since the general emerged from the war with great honors, and it would be a pity if it had been known that a stupid clodhopper had been at the bottom of his rise.

When through neglect or overwork I get run down and my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling, I get a bottle of Lydia E. FOURTEENTH INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER LI.

The Last Arbitrament.

The call to arms was as music to Count Frederick's ears. Leaving his idle, addled king steeped in his follies, he hurried to the front.

The army was ready enough to put itself under his control, recognized him as the one ruler in all the realm. His quick orders, supplementing the arrangements of the day before, soon set all events in train It had been his plan to mask his men deep within the town; and, as has been said, the jaws of the trap now were sprung

The charge of the forces of King Cortislaw was met by the countershock of the Gretzhoffen arms. Frederick's forces sprang forward with the enthusiasm of troops long in leash, and swept back the invaders For a few moments the two lines writhed here and there in deadly embrace, as two well-matched wrestlers, neither having the advantage

Deep within the palace Kitty had forgotten her errand in the greater import of these sudden events The coin had done all this—it was indeed a thing of omen, a thing of destiny

She peered from the palace windows here and there, seeking to gain some knowledge of the fray Now and then a wounded man limped back Others came, carried by the litter bearers of the palace Defeat was at hand for the defenders of the palace

"Is there no hope, then?" she demanded of one of the high officials of the household. "Where are our reserves? See, our men can hold them no longer—they must have help or all is lost."

The official, thus adjured, pulled himself together for a moment of thought.

"Yes," he exclaimed, "there is a regiment held in reserve back of the palace, toward the water front"

"Then summon them at once!" exclaimed the young woman.

Presently the retiring troops heard the sound of bugles, the clatter of hoofs from the opposite direction, saw the advance of the Gretzhoffen reserves so badly needed They swept on now to the front rallying their retreating men. The leader of the reserves looked around for the commander of the battle, instead he saw the figure of a young girl flash down the palace steps and hurry toward them.

"Yonder!" she cried. "He is at the front, supporting their full attack"

It was time now for the reserves that was sure Close to his own thinning front line, Frederick sat, from his saddle scanning the work of a battery hidden somewhere back of the advance of the Grahoffen troops, which was raining ruin on his own men. It was hidden somewhere, he could not tell where although he swept the line beyond with the glasses time after time.

At last he found it, marked it by the smoke belched from a screen of green—green branches lashed to the frames of guns

Count Frederick called an officer to him. "We must take that battery," he said. "If we don't, in five minutes we will be gone"

Meantime Sachio himself bold leader of armed men, albeit self seeking courtier, openly exulted at what seemed to him the quick success of his country's arms He held on, directly under the eye of Cortislaw himself, and no unskilled soldier he now showed himself to be

"In five minutes, your majesty," said he, "we will have broken their front There will remain nothing but for us to advance"

His eye, skilled in observation in such scenes, caught sight of the mounted figure of Count Frederick leader of the Gretzhoffen arms He recognized him in the distance—and quickly sent orders to the officer of the battery. Whether or not it was due to this slight change of aim, the next salvo from the hidden guns accomplished that which Sachio most desired. Sachio turned his glasses once more upon the spot where his enemy had sat. His horse was down, blown to pieces by the explosion of a shell, and the tall figure of Frederick himself lay prone!

"Now, forward, men!" cried Sachio "They have broken! They will run! At them with the bayonet! Charge!"

The Grahoffen troops swept forward. Man to man, now, the ultimate issue must be determined. It was at this moment that, coming on at a gallop from the protection of the palace grounds, the reserve regiment deployed into action in regimental front, the leader cheering his men on into the charge They met the advancing infantry of Grahoffen, many of them with their rifles unloaded, depending upon the bayonet—met them, and rode them down. The line of assault, unsuspecting this new resistance, recoiled and turned.

Kitty had pressed forward behind the column which now pushed back the advance of the enemy.

The plan of Count Frederick was completed. But as to Count Frederick, where was he? She found him at last, surrounded by a little group of his men, who supported him as he lay.

"What do you here, mademoiselle?" said he. "Retire at once This is no place for you."

"You are alive! You will recover!" Kitty Gray was on her knees beside him.

Frederick essayed to rise, but fell back for a moment "Give me a moment's time," said he. "I am not hurt. The shell came close, but my horse saved me, I suppose I am but slightly wounded. I think it was the shock of the explosion. I was dazed for an instant Where are my men? Come, let me up!"

"Your men are on ahead, Count Frederick," replied Kitty Gray; "too far for you to catch them up now. Come, you must rest Come with me"

"With you, mademoiselle?" she heard him say He staggered to his feet.

But now—and her woman's heart admiring ever the strong and resolute, rejoiced to see it—Count Frederick's gaze was turned not to her but toward the front where the fighting lay.

'My men," said he. "Look at them—the royal reserves! Who brought them on? We have won! They are broken. The battle is ours, after all!"

CHAPTER LII.

Roleau, the Spy.

In all these rapid events of the last few hours Roleau had been left quite to his own resources. His mistress had slipped away from him without his knowledge. Count Frederick was gone, he knew not where. He guessed rather than knew that each of them might be seeking the other. That meant, according to his reasoning, that they must be at or near the royal palace. It was thither Roleau at length turned his own footsteps.

Discovered at last through the notice attracted by his lack of uniform, he was halted by an officer, who brought him forthwith to the commander of the army, none less than Sachio, who sat close to the king, watching the progress of the battle.

"General, said the officer to Sachio, "here is a man who was trying to get through our lines What shall we do with him? We think perhaps he is a spy"

"So, fellow, you are here again?" he said, grimly "I know you, yes, well enough We have met more than once before now. I recall you at my lodging and elsewhere. What do you here? Where is she, your mistress, the young American?"

"Yonder somewhere, excellency," said Roleau, pointing toward the palace

"Take him away, lieutenant, and keep him safe until I call for him."

It was thus that Roleau remained for a time unobserved, but was ultimately caught in the general rout of King Cortislaw's armies. It was night when finally the rout ended under the walls of Grahoffen itself

Cortislaw was an old man when he had started out that day Since morning he had aged yet a dozen years. Nothing was left to him! The end of his life's dream was at hand.

"Curses upon all things!" exclaimed old Cortislaw, at last, sweeping a level glance under his bushy gray brows at his courtiers. "Once more they have proved too much for us. It was my one remaining chance."

None dared raise a voice against the wrath of the broken king After a time, he went on:

"What use, then, Count Sachio, was their coin, after all? We had it, and we lost"

'Count Frederick told me, your majesty,' began Sachio, "that what we had was only a counterfeit. He said he gave it to the king of Gretzhoffen in a bit of deceit for purposes of his own It read the same—that I may be sworn. Its errand should have been the same But as to our victory—look, it was counterfeit."

"Yes," said Cortislaw slowly, "count that not for us, but against us I say the cursed coin is bewitched—it is in the service of Gretzhoffen, not our own. It is the evil spirit of our own kingdom, that I will be sworn."

But," said Count Sachio, after a time, "the end never is till all is done. True, we have failed at arms, your majesty, but after all, that does not affect the existence of the Gretzhoffen treasure. I myself have been in that room. I have been beneath the walls—I know the very place where that secret is concealed. Look, we have all the coin—and even if this half is counterfeit, their half, the true half though it be, is no more than half. They cannot read the riddle of their own treasure, and yet we know it! Who, then, has won this battle? Riches are needful for any king. Without the secret which we ourselves hold, what may they hope? No, not all is yet lost, your majesty!"

The old king turned upon him his burning eye. "Count Sachio," said he, "you have disappointed me time and again regarding yonder coin; yet after all, of all my noblemen, you have been the most successful, for surely you brought to us the secret. That is true. At one time we had all the coin. Long we have had half the coin. Today we held it all in our possession, and we still hold it. Bring me the coin. I want to examine both halves once more with my own eyes."

"It is well, your majesty. I will go get both halves, we will compare them."

Count Sachio hastened to the room where on his return from the battlefield he had changed his dusty apparel. His tunic and trousers lay where he had left them. Evidently his orderly had fled.

Count Sachio took up the trousers and thrust a hand into a pocket. He knew where he had kept the coin, in his little leather folding portemonnaie. But he withdrew his hand and looked at it curiously. The blank look on his face remained as he felt quickly in other pockets of the same garment, as he searched nervously through every pocket of the tunic which he had discarded.

When Count Sachio returned to his king he was in deep pallor; consternation sat on his face.

"Well, well, Sachio!" demanded that monarch, testily "You have on your face now the same look which I have learned to know. But surely you have not failed. Come, let me see it."

"I cannot, your majesty. It is gone!"

'Gone? Yet you had it?"

"Yes, your majesty Both halves—I had them both. You yourself gave them in my keeping on the field. I was responsible for them, that is true. But, see here where I hid them—everything is empty now They have been taken away by someone. And who could have known of it?"

A silence fell upon the group.

"Stay!" added Sachio a little later—"there was a man, a prisoner, who was brought to me just before our retreat began—the man named Roleau."

"Find that man!" said Cortislaw, coldly, returning a savage eye upon Sachio.

The prisoners taken by the Grahoffen men, more by chance than plan in their own tempestuous retreat, had been grouped under loose guard in the rear compound of the Grahoffen palace. It was with them that Roleau had been confined. Thither Count Sachio now turned his steps Hastily he inquired of this officer and that, of this prisoner and that.

Once more the spy Roleau had escaped!

CHAPTER LIII.

By Land and Sea.

In the confusion which followed the retreat of the Grahoffen troops upon their own capital, Roleau found himself swept away from the officer who first had taken him in charge.

Roleau not unused to scenes of violence, had himself well in hand, and now studied his situation calmly, finding it somewhat to his own advantage He saw that he now had better opportunity for escape than at any time before

Resolved at last, he slipped away beyond his guards, and made off through the city, not to the westward toward the plain which lay between the two cities, but to the east where lay the water front of Grahoffen.

The desert which lay between these two little kingdoms ran far to the southward in a barren peninsula, on either side of which swept the blue sea Each kingdom, therefore, might be said to have a seaport as good as the other, although that of Gretzhoffen lay closer to the Mediterranean proper. Nevertheless, the Grahoffen harbor was an ample one, and here all the tiny navy of the little kingdom lay—beyond the aviation grounds where the scanty corps of that service sometimes held their maneuvers.

As may be seen, each of these little kingdoms, jealous of the other, and rivaling methods of richer empires than their own, had developed as best it could each branch of the service approved in modern warfare. Each had its little corps of air craft, each its miniature navy, its submarines, its destroyers.

Full details of all this Roleau did not know. He knew well enough, none the less, that escape for him lay by water and not by land.

It was night when he approached the wharves along the Grahoffen harbor front. At their anchorage lay the dim gray bulks of the few battleships belonging to Cortislaw. At one of the docks signs of activity attracted him. A yacht, a long, clean lined vessel, a thoroughbred in all details, beautifully equipped and apparently well manned and officered, was getting ready to set out. Roleau looked at it closely. It bore the royal ensign In truth, it was none less than the yacht of royalty itself.

"Good morrow, sir," said Roleau to the captain of the yacht, before whom he presented himself a little later. "I see you are setting out. Would you take a passenger, one as anxious as yourself to leave this place?"

The captain looked at this intruder for a moment with none too much favor.

"This boat is not for charter," said he. "We are leaving, it is true, but we offer no passage for the public"

"Nor am I under charter for the public," rejoined Roleau calmly. "I am in high service None the less, I am ready to pay for transportation from this place I am careless where you may be sailing Ask me not too many questions, and I will not inquire of you, my dear captain, why you are now sailing with the king's yacht"

This bold chance thrust went home Roleau suspected now that the captain was sailing under orders of his own and for reasons of his own. The man hesitated now.

"Well, then," said he, at length, "we have room, that is true But as to refugees—"

"Call me no refugee!" said Roleau firmly. "I tell you, I am on business of importance, and care little where you go, save only that you take me hence, I can pay"

By this time Roleau was aboard The captain neither welcomed him nor repulsed him He only shrugged his shoulders, and accepted some coins which Roleau placed in his hand.

Young Man Will Spend Remainder Of His Life In The Penitentiary

August Reaping, the young Latrobe man who shot and killed Farmer Wedge on a public road east of Latrobe, is now in the Western penitentiary where he is destined to remain during the remainder of his life. Reaping and James Lang were handcuffed together on Thursday morning and conducted to the State's strong house by Deputy Sheriff Charles Copeman. The entire gang of four young men, Reaping, Showalter, Shafer and Scot, implicated in the murder on the night of November 12, 1914, have been sent away. Reaping had a first degree murder verdict and the others got second degree. Their term was a twenty-year one. Reaping seemed rather glad that he was moved to his new quarters.

As James Lang was taken away for his two years' term, several of his near companions standing on the street corner, remarked: "There goes a bad man. Too bad that he had to leave." Lang had been sentenced to his term for the crime of breaking into freight car No. 48,631 on the night of June 8, 1915. He had broken the seal and had entered the car. An officer was right ther and closed the door on him. In another car. An officer was right there and ticles. He entered a plea of guilty August 28.

First Born" were great, wonderful. The people stayed and saw them twice, and when the pictures were over, and they went out, they were still looking at the cartoon, wishing to see a little more. They could not get away. They will tell you so, too. Whose fault is it? Of course yours, for I was talking for two weeks about them. I spent more money in advertising than we took in. Blame it on yourself. We tell you that today, tomorrow and every day next week are not to be missed.

Today Max Figman and Lois Meredith, the two popular favorites in "My Best Girl," the scintillating comedy drama in five acts. Metro feature consequently good.

Tomorrow in addition to our regular prgram of an Indian drama in two reels, the Joker comedy, "The Diamond from the Sky" where it is liable to win $10,000 for a suggestion, we have as a special feature, the terrible disaster of the New York subway, where many people lost their lives, which picture was taken by four Universal camera men 30 minutes after the accident.

Next week—We have three days of the finest L KO comedies. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. In addition to "The Broken Coin," "Her Prey," in 2 reels, a Universal production, it contains some remarkable scenes of the surf and beach, wonderful diving and swimming in the dangerous shark infested waters of the bay, includes wonderful films taken from glass bottomed boats and many deeds of daring.

Wednesday—"The Romance of Elaine," with Pearl White and the Mysterious Mr. X. Wonderful.

Thursday—Look out. The world famous actor, Nat Goodwin in one of Broadway Universal features, "Business is Business." Now don't you make the same mistake you did this week.

Friday—One of the favorite actresses and the best of Metro Co., Mary Miles Minter in a picturization of the song classic "Always in the Way." "My new mamma scolds me every day. I'm always in the Way" etc.

Saturday—"The Ghost Wagon" in three reels. Every movie fan loves a western story on the screen if it's good, and the fan knows when he sees good western stuff too. "The Ghost Wagon" is the kind you will like. The "The Diamond From the Sky," the Animated Weekly, etc. So don't you make such mistakes which we consider fatal. You must see every picture next week. Today and tomorrow we have them for you.—Olympic. 1t

Start Glass Works

After a period of suspension covering two years, the Belle Vernon glass factory will go to work next week. The announcement has been officially made and hundreds of workmen are rejoicing. The fires will go in Monday morning, it is announced. The starting of this industry means much to Belle Vernon and the entire upper valley. After the closing of the plant, many families left the town to seek employment elsewhere, and some of them are already coming back and others are expected to follow. The resumption will effect about 600 workmen.

The Loon a Good Diver.

As a diver the loon excels, and naturally, for it is his sole means of livelihood. Not only is be marvelously quick, but he can remain under water for a seemingly endless time. In swimming under water he uses both wings and feet and can go for several hundred yards in this fashion. The loon, like many other waterfowl, sleeps on the water with his head tucked under his wing.
